U of M center for cardiovascular repair director Doris Taylor and her students are researching a way to build new organs. They’ve successfully washed dead cells from a nonliving heart, injected it with living cells and it started beating. They hope to build donor organs from a recipient’s own cells. Someday you could be your own donor. So the search continues.

More at umn.edu