“To have terrorists target our food—the consequences would be devastating,” says Dr. Amy Kircher. “What we’re doing to prevent that is on par with anything we’re doing to protect our airports or buildings.” Kircher and her team are working to make sure the global food supply is kept safe from potential threats, including from those who are trying to contaminate food. “We’re part of homeland security, only we protect your dinner,” she says.

umn.edu/kircher