A deadly virus that infects an animal halfway around the world could one day become a global outbreak that threatens millions of people. But no matter where the source, we’re finding a way to prevent global pandemics right here at the University of Minnesota. Bringing together experts across disciplines, politics, tribes and borders, we’re finding solutions to stopping outbreaks before they start. It’s one more way the future is being Made in Minnesota.